1.0 PLAN OVERVIEW AND PURPOSE

The Emergency Planning and Community Right-To-Know Act (EPCRA) was passed by Congress in 1986, and is also known as Title III of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act (SARA Title III). This Act requires the preparation of local hazardous materials emergency response plans. The State of Florida uses the ten regional planning council districts, depicted in Illustration 1-1, to perform this function. Following federal legislation, the Florida Legislature passed the Emergency Response and Community Right-to-Know Act of 1988, as amended, which establishes a fee system to fund the development of regional and county response plans.

In compliance with this mandate, the North Central Florida Local Emergency Planning Committee (NCFLEPC) has prepared and updated this hazardous materials emergency response plan for its 12-county region. The Committee is also actively pursuing the successful implementation of its responsibilities through the programs being developed and carried out by the LEPC and agencies of local government.

The responsibilities placed on the LEPC and on local government agencies include establishing predetermined chains-of-command for managing local resources during a hazardous materials emergency, as contained in county plans and, if the emergency exceeds local response capabilities, procedures on how to request state assistance. Although facilities that have reported that they store or have on-site extremely hazardous substances (EHSs) in amounts over the threshold planning quantities (TPQs) are specifically addressed in this plan, a framework is established for the development of procedures to include all types of hazardous materials releases.

A range of possible emergency situations and some measures to minimize the adverse impacts of a toxic chemical release are also described in this plan. All local emergency response organizations are encouraged to use the information contained in this plan to develop their own hazardous materials standard operating procedures. Prior agreement on incident command systems and operating procedures is essential for the safety of local response agencies including law enforcement, emergency medical services, fire and rescue, and the public.

Response strategies included in the plan assume the existence of specific resources and capabilities that are subject to change over time. Therefore, it is important that the plan be regularly updated to include changes in available resources in addition to adding new facilities that locate in the region.

Once the threat to human life has been removed, consideration will be given to mitigating adverse environmental consequences.
